White Banyan Garden

It is a magnificent landscape of "one tree forms a forest" formed by many pillar roots. There are more than 300 pillar roots in total. The Banyan Garden is not only an excellent material for environmental education, but also a well-known tourist attraction. In the 101st year of the Republic of China, Mr. Ang Lee, an international director, chose this place as the filming scene of the movie "The Fantastic Adventures of Boy Pi". However, since this area is under the jurisdiction of research institutions, in order to achieve the purpose of ecological conservation and habitat management, there are certain restrictions on the entry and exit of personnel.

Now we have an agreement with the Kenting National Park Management Office to jointly guide and train port community commentators, develop ecological commentary tours, and adopt a reservation system. Therefore, in order to maintain the ecological resources of the banyan garden and maintain the quality of environmental education, all human activities should be carried out on the boardwalk when using the site, so as to avoid trampling the soil of the banyan area and pulling aerial roots that will affect the growth of the banyan tree.

Tea Garden

The ecological guide of the Kenting port community takes you into the port tea garden to experience the fun of picking tea for yourself! In addition to a glimpse of the tea-picking process, the guides have detailed ecological explanations during the journey.
